

Well the excitement of moving into our new building is growing rapidly. We have received many requests from employees who want to see the building and where they will be located. Unfortunately it is just a flurry of activity as they work towards substantial completion and additional people in the building risk putting the project behind schedule.

So I thought I'd give you all a "virtual" tour of the building. Here goes.....

These first two photos are of the exterior as you approach the main entrance. All of the walkways have been specially equipped with an antifreeze solution under the concrete to ensure that ice does not form thus reducing the risk of slip and fall injuries for both our employees and our participants. It also eliminates the need to use salt which gets tracked into the building and destroys carpeting.

As you enter the building on your left is Human Resources.

HR reception

And a bit further to the left is the main entrance to Child and Family Services. This unit also has a secure door in the back where they will enter and be greeted by security if they are here for a supervised visitation.

If you bear to the right upon entering the building you will find the main lobby and a curved reception desk. The lobby area will eventually have text and images that tell the story of the Alaska Native people of the region.

The room behind the main reception will house security. Behind the security area is the Coho Cup. This area has a modern, sleek feel to it. The southern wall is all glass.

(COHO Cup under construction)

Further to the right is the conferencing center. It features four retractable walls so that the center can be one, two, three or four individual rooms. There is a fifth conference room on the right which will also double as a live performance studio for KNBA.

(main lobby with reception under construction)

The second floor will be home to Educational Services, The Alaska Native Justice Center, The CIRI Foundation and Recovery Services. The Recovery Services area has two large group rooms, one of which has a retractable wall and can be easily made into two rooms.

The third floor will house all of the employment and training programs as well as Alaska's People. As you get off the elevator you will find intake to the left.

(ETSD intake stations)

And on the right will be a large open area that will function as our Career Development Center. Once complete the photo below will contain rows of desks with computers for participants to use for resume writing, job search and other training needs.

(Career Development Center)

The fourth floor will be home to Administration, Accounting and KNBA. The main entrance to the administrative suite has two large glass relites (and double doors. The Board Room is to the left and will feature a round table to better engage and communicate with meeting attendees. The remainder of the north and west side of the floor are offices and workstations for accounting staff.

Sorry I don't have photos – my camera ran out of batteries.

KNBA will be located in the south and east wing of the fourth floor. They will have a series of sound proof rooms for recording and mixing. The main studio will also be there and beginning in April the membership drives will be conducted from there.

Hope that helps. And don't forget to start packing!
